

Christopher Tracey
Shipman & Goodwin LLP

Christopher Tracey is a member of the School Law Practice Group at Shipman & Goodwin LLP. Chris represents public school districts in all areas of school law, and has a particular experience regarding special education, education reform, and budgetary matters. He has advised clients regarding legal issues related to response to the opioid crisis. Prior to practicing law, Chris worked as an educational policy researcher. As a researcher at Harvard University and several other prominent research organizations, he studied the impact of educational reform plans on urban students. Chris also taught at an alternative high school for at-risk Yup'ik youth in Southwestern Alaska.
